Flick Case A 'Crisis' In Bonn

Party Debaters Agree Scandal Hits Confidence

By Henry Tanner International Herald Tribune BONN — The government and opposition speakers agreed in an often acid parliamentary debate on Friday that the Flick political-funding scandal had damaged publie confidence in established parties to the point where democracy could be in danger.

Speaker after speaker said that the "crisis of the parties" may yet become a "crisis of the state." Others even compared present-day West Germany with the Weimar Republic, whose collapse, they said, began when the democratic parties of that time lost the public's confidence in the 1920s.

of the so-called Flick scandal. The Flick holding company, one of the largest family-held industrial groups in the country, is reported to have paid 25 million Deutsche marks (more than $8 million) to politicians and political parties in the late 1970s, at a time when it successfully lobbied for an 800-million Deutsche mark tax exemption on capital gains.

Contrary to expectations, Chan-cellor Helmut Kohl did not speak in the debate, even though his past comments on the issues at stake were sharply criticized by opposi-tion speakers. The government's

Libyan Troops Are Still in Chad

Mitterrand Says

PARIS - President François Mitterrand admitted Friday that African colony although it knew that Libya had stopped its parallel withdrawal.

Mr. Mitterrand, who met Thursday on the Greek island of Crete with the Libyan leader, Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, said at a news conference that two to three Liby-an battalions, or 800 to 1,200 men, still held positions in Chad. The admission was a striking turnabout from statements by the government last Saturday, at the United Na-

Thursday, that the withdrawal on both sides was total and complete.

The government spokesman, Ro-land Dumas, said that France realized that the troop withdrawals were slowing on Nov. 10. Mr. Alit-terrand, in a statement, described it Libyan troops were still in Chad.

He taeitly aeknowledged that were slowing on Nov. 10. Mr. Mitterand of its forces from its former as "both a slowing down of this drawal of its forces from its former withdrawal movement or a reinwithdrawal movement, or a rein-forcement of the Libyan presence."

The sudden about-face and Mr. Mitterrand's surprise meeting with the Libyan leader, a man usually described by French officials as a destabilizing force in North Africa, constituted what both politicians in the opposition and editorialists normally favorable to the government treated as a major foreign policy error by the president.

In three-and-a-half years in office, it appeared to be the first time that Mr. Mitterrand risked serious embarrassment in a foreign policy

The situation, moreover, was likely to strain generally good rela-tions between the United States and France because disclosures that France withheld information on the pullout followed documentation by the U.S. State Department, based on satellite photos, of the continuing Libyan presence in

Mr. Dumas suggested at a press luncheon Friday that the United States was being hypocritical in the affair by continuing to trade with Libya while pressing its allies to complete the continuing to the state of the continuing to the state of the state o combat it on other fronts. Asked if he felt that the Reagan administra-tion sought to trap Mr. Mitterrand and undercut the meeting with Col-onel Qadhafi, Mr. Dumas said, "That's impossible."

In a statement, Mr. Mitterrand explained that his meeting with Colonel Qadhafi came about because "I wanted to underscore the legitimate demands of France." He said that he and the Lihvan leader agreed "that the commanding printo the last Lihyan or French sol-

There has been little pressure from the French public for a withdrawal. A more likely hypothesis is that the government was responding to both urging from the left wing of the Socialist Party and to a desire to re-establish relations with Libva at a time when it has moved eloser to Morocco and could influence the presidential succession in neighboring Tunisia.

In his statement, Mr. Mitterrand said the Libyan leader "assured me that everything was ordered for a total evacuation.

But when he was asked what time limits were set to complete the withdrawal, and what the consequences would be if Libyan troops continued to remain in Chad, the government spokesman said: "I can't answer you."

Mr. Dumas employed two explanations for the contradiction between Mr. Mitterrand's acknowledgment of the continuing Libyan troop presence on Friday, and the statements that the troops had left. Prime among these institutions are the office of the Supreme Religious Guide, filled by the charismatic Ayatollah Khomeini, and the network of mosques that have functioned as a power base for the clergy since

President Ronald Reagan was shown on Friday documents on the famine in Ethiopia by M. Peter McPherson, the head of the U.S. Agency for International Development. U.S. Is Sending More Food Aid to Ethiopia

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The United States is rushing an additional 85,000 tons of food, valued at $37.5 million, to Ethiopia as part of the U.S. effort to feed starving people to Africa, the head of the U.S. foreign aid effort said Friday.

M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the Agency for International Development, said the new food aid is part of an "enormous outpouring" of U.S. aid to Africa that has amounted to 537,000 tons of food valued at $190 million in the past 45

In addition to the aid for Ethiopia, which has been suffering from a long drought, Mr. McPherson said that the United States is sending $5.9 million of food to Mozambique, $8.5 million to Mauritania and $5.6 million to Chad, amounts that he said represent about 52,000 tons of food.

BEIRUT (UPI) - Artillery and tank battles between Moslem militia and Lebanese Army units spread across the mountains near Beirut on Friday despite a political agreement over a greater role for the military

The army blamed the Moslem Druze militia of Walid Jumblat, minister of public works, transport and tourism, for starting the latest round of violence, which coincided with preparations for the Lebanese Army to deploy along the southern coastal highway ahead of any Israeli withdraw. al from the region. MOSCOW (UPI) - President Konstantin U. Chernenko says the Soviet Union's military budget will be increased to 1985 to counter attempts by the West to gain military superiority.

"We cannot fail to see the growing aggressiveness of imperialism in attempts to gain military superiority over the socialist community," Mr. Chernenko said Thursday at a meeting of the ruling Politburo. At the meeting, he approved a 1985 draft budget that will be submitted Nov. 27 to the Supreme Soviet, the nominal parliament, for approval. ATHENS (NYT) - The Greek government has decided to purchase 40 American F-16G jet fighter planes and 40 French Mirage-2000 sincraft to meet the needs of its air force over the next decade.

The long-awaited decision, made on Wednesday after more than two and a half years of talks, means that the Greeks rejected the F-18 fighter. Defense Ministry sources said that both General Dynamics, maker of the F-16, and Dassault, which manufactures the Mirage, had agreed to produce spare parts jointly in Greece, facilitating the transfer of high-level technology, and to make other industrial investments in Greece. The government has already said that the purchase of a total of 100 aircraft would cost close to $3 billion, including the spare parts and

"Third World countries have the power of debt," he said. "They should

Westmoreland Takes Stand in Trial, Disputes CBS Data on Troop Totals

By Eleanor Randolph Wathington Post Service NEW YORK — William C. Westmoreland. straight-backed, his voice authoritative, has taken the witness stand to defend his record 17 years ago as commander of American ground forces in Viet-

In the first day of what may be a week of off-and-on testimony in his $120-million libel action against CBS Inc., the retired U.S. Army general provided a packed federal courtroom Thursday with a series of specific denials of sections of a 1982 documentary that he says de-famed him by charging that his command misrepresented enemy troop figures. General Westmoreland told the ury that a key document he supposedly ordered changed - a thick analysis of enemy troop data called the official order of battle — is oot one he remembers ever using in his daily duties in Vietnam.

"I was aware of it," he said. "It was available in my office, but I don't ever recall having an occasion in refer to it." The former commander said he was concerned primarily with daily or "current" intelligence, whereas the Order of Battle was "historic data, and it was oot something that was useful to me."

The general also said that categories of "irregular" enemy troops that CBS said he ordered dropped from the official summary were not recognized at the time as "fighters, the people we wanted to destroy in a military way."

General Westmoreland, 70, also presented the jury with a dramatie personal contrast to the view of him they saw on the CBS broadcast The Uncounted Enemy: A Vietnam Deception" when it aired almost three years ago.

On the show and in an unedited version of his May 1981 interview with CBS that was shown Thursday after his live testimony, the general seemed occasionally defensive, and irritated by questions from the in-terviewer, Mike Wallace. General Westmoreland testified that he had, in effect, two direct superiors, neither of whom was the president. They were Elisworth Bunker, the U.S. ambassador in Vietnam and his civilian boss, and Admiral U.S. Grant Sharp Jr., commander in chief of the Pacifie forces and his "military boss."

The general also said he disagreed with the evaluation of "irregular strength presented by his intelligence chief, Major General Joseph McChristian, who is expected to be a key witness for CBS.

Within the next two weeks, General McChristian's staff gave him two briefings detailing the intelligence information that supported the higher figure, General West-moreland said.

He said he objected at first to the decision to cootinue counting all irregulars as one group. "I wanted 10 revise the order of battle in order to separate the fighters from the

Later Motherhood Could Become Stable Trend in U.S., Report Says

Washington Past Service WASHINGTON — Late motherhood — the tendency of many women to delay childbearing until their late 20s or early 30s — could be a "stable feature of the population scene" in the United States for years to come, according to a study by the Population Reference

Over the past decade, the study's authors, Wendy Baldwin and Christine Winquist Nord, said Tuesday, there has been a remarkable change in childbearing patterns among American women compared with those of the baby-boom generation, when women tended to marry young and quickly have lots of children.

Women are marrying later now. Only about half get married by age 24, compared with three-quarters a generation ago. And they are waiting much longer to have children. In 1970, 19 percent of first births were to women 25 or older. By 1982 it was 36 percent. The median are of women 25 or older.

median age of women giving birth for the first time rose from 21.8 years in 1960 to 23.2 in 1982.

The authors say that the increase in delayed childbearing is rooted phenomenon.

Among the reasons for the increase are the large-scale entry of women into the labor force in the past generation; increased educa-tion for women, which gives them more job opportunities; the availability of contraceptives; and the recent recession.

Plot Allegations Abound As Gandhi Probe Begins Speculation on Conspiracy Includes

Involvement of Sikhs Living Abroad By William Branigin

Washington Post Service
NEW DELHI — Investigations into the murder of Indira Gandhi by two Sikh security guards are getting under way amid reports of a wider conspiracy and speculation about the possible involvement of militant Sikhs living abroad. Indian intelligence officials have told local newspapers that other unidentified persons knew of or were involved in the plot and that a "substantial amount" of money changed hands before the assassination. But no proof of the allegations has yet been produced.

Much of the investigation will depend on the statements of the surviving suspect, Satwant Singh, a 21-year-old police constable assigned to security duty at the prime minister's residence. He and another guard, Beant Singh, 36, reported-ly opened fire on Mrs. Gandhi as she was walking toward her office in her heavily guarded residential compound.

Beant Singh was subsequently killed by other security guards and Satwant Singh was seriously wounded. Satwant Singh is undergoing interrogation after having been moved Thursday from a heavily guarded hospital to an undisclosed location and formally placed under arrest.

Also reportedly being ques-tioned are three police subinspec-tors described as close to the two Singhs, a police constable who bunked next to Sarwant Singh in a barracks, relatives of the two men and members of an Indo-Tibetan Border Police company who were among the prime minister's security guards and took the suspects tion has been assigned to a special police investigation headed by S. Anand Ram, chief of the Central Industrial Security Force.

On the face of it, the assassination was an inside job led by a Sikh fanatic seeking revenge for the army's attack on Sikh militants in the revered Golden Temple shrine in June. Yet, a number of mysteries

Among them are the connections, if any, between the assassins and Sikh extremists in India's troubled Punjab state and abroad, the apparent security lapses that allowed the plot to go undetected and the murder itself unhindered, and the circumstances of the subsequent shooting that killed Beant Singh and wounded Satwant Singh after they had surrendered. Spokesmen for the prime minis ter's office and the Foreign Ministry have declined to comment on Indian press reports that Beant Singh was related to a senior Indian diplomat, Harrinder Singh, who quit his post at the Indian Embassy in Oslo and publicly declared his support for Sikh separatists after army's raid on the Golden Temple complex in Amritsar.

According to these accounts, Beant Singh accompanied Indira Gandhi last year to Scandinavian capitals and London, where he met with Harrinder Singh.

After the assassination, police searching Beant Singh's house re-portedly found a photograph of Jaruail Singh Bhindranwale, the militant Sikh religious leader who was among hundreds of Sikhs killed in the Golden Temple raid, as well as some of his taped speeches, some extremist Sikh bterature and a few foreign currency notes. Known as a mild-mannered and withdrawn man, Beant Singh had earned a reputation for loyalty during his I2-year police career.

But after the shooting of Mrs. Gandhi on Oct. 31, Beant Singh reportedly threw down his weapon and shouted defiantly to her entou-rage. "I have done what I had to do.

Now you do what you have to do.' His accomplice, Satwant Singh, also dropped his weapon, and the two were hustled off by police to a nearby, guard room, where they were reportedly held by about a

The IMF: A Good Guide

with us, stretching from Argentina to Yugoslavia. Part of Argentina's debt to U.S. banks has been downgraded, which is like a restaurant losing a star. Yugoslavia seeks more funancial help but balks at conditions. which is like cutting portions when you are making a loss. Both think the International Monetary Fund's menus too meager.

Still, procedures for alleviating debt have worked well so far. The debtors design policies, in agreement with the IMF, to bring inflation and external deficits under control. In exchange the IMF extends credit and encourages international banks to stretch out the debtors' repayment obligations.

Even in Argentina, where political difficulties were great, the IMF achieved arrangements that are temporarily acceptable. In some cases (Mexico and Venezuela) it has been possible to move on from the short term toward pacts that reschedule debt over several years. One should move still further, stretching obligations to the banks over a much longer time, to reduce uncertainty all around, but this is difficult. Banks do not want to commit themselves beyond the rather short time-borizon within which the IMF is allowed to operate. And the IMFs rules cannot be changed overnight.

What greatly complicates rescheduling is the way debtor countries resist stabilization programs that the IMF can accept - and can persuade creditor banks to accept. Few sovereign governments willingly submit to what is known as "the full IMF treatment." Austerity is particularly unpopular when it seems to be imposed from outside. Even when Britain was in this boat in 1976, most cabinet ministers objected, very publicly, to the conditions the IMF required.

One can sympathize with the debtors. They blame their plight on mistakes in the industrialized world, although this is only

The Third World debt problem is still half true. They ask why they should pursue austerity when the United States runs a buge deficit and finances it from abroad, although this privilege may not last forever.

Yugoslavia's protests, for example, reflect real local difficulties. Federal control of the economy bas long been weak because the nation began by being little more than a geographical expression, and ethnic differences required decentralization of power. There have already been four years of austerity as a result of policies agreed upon with the IMF. But inflation is still rampant because the government simply does not have the policy levers that are available to, say, America to bring things quickly under control. The same can be said, mutatis mutandis. for a lot of other debtor countries.

But there is no point in blaming the IMF. One way or another the debtors will get their accounts back into reasonable balance. Either they follow the counsels of the Fund (sometimes unwise in detail but seldom in their main thrust) and reduce deficits in an orderly fashion. Or byper-inflation, with its grave implications for political stability and the complete drying up of international credit, reduces the deficit for them. Jamaica's prime minister has sensibly remarked that the austerity measures adopted by his country bad little really to do with the Fund. They would have had to be taken anyway.

One of the more constructive developments of the recent bleak years has been the IMF's emergence as a guide to international banks, influencing their attitudes to debtors by awarding or refusing its seal of good bousekeeping. The debtor countries will do well to go along with this development. We would have been happier if the IMF influence had emerged earlier, to keep things good before catastrophe loomed. But history is seldom made when times are happy.

Pakistanis Woo India, Reassess the Bomb

I SLAMABAD — The death of Indira Gandhi has brought to the surface in Pakistan a feeling, long in the making, that the future stability of the subcontinent depends not so much on further development of Pakistan's military capacity, including nuclear weapons, as on working out a peaceful equi-librium with India.

could be that the murder of Mrs. nuclear explosion in the Rajasthan Gandhi has provided the psycholo-desert in 1974. It has always been a gical impetus to jolt Pakistan and

Whether watching President Zia

Mrs. Gandhi on Pakistan television a few hours after the news was received, or eating dinner in the priva-cy of cabinet ministers' homes, or taking tea in villages in the North-West Frontier province on the Afghan border, the message was the same — grief for a great woman, an urge to reassure the Indians, a disposition to take no advantage from the event and a hope that the hatchet could be buried once and for all. How all this translates in hard political terms remains to be seen.

but the right feelings are there and the right gestures have been made. Moreover, the last few years have gradually seen the clouds cleaning on the most emotive issue of all -Pakistan's alleged intent to build a nuclear weapon.

Five years ago a U.S. ambassador to India told me that the best intelli-gence expected a Pakistani nuclear explosion within two or three years. Since then private and public estimates have constantly been pushed

The Pakistani endeavor to match
It is too early to be sure, but it India's capability dates from India's popular one. The late President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto shaped the public mood when he spoke of Pakistanis eating grass if necessary in order to build their own bomb. If Pakistan were no longer to be constantly defeated in war with India, Pakistan needed a nuclear deterrent.

This is still very much the popular erception, and many will argue that if President Zia announced that Pakistan was unilaterally giving up its nuclear option his government would be overthrown the next day. Yet there has been a change. Se-course at length on Pakistan's right to have a nuclear weapon - the military balance with India, the hypocrisy of the nuclear powers who have made little progress on disarmament, the long-term threat from the Soviet Union — but they now conclude with the rider that, having come so far in the race to catch up with India, there would be no point in going the final 100 meters. They know Pakistan has the knowledge and facilities to assemble a bomb. Why, the agrament runs, should we counterproductive?

A nuclear test would only sour relations with the United States, which under President Reagan, has again become a supplier of high-performance military sircraft and other weapoury and a major contributor of foreign aid. And it would nigger a full-scale nuclear race with India that Pakistan realizes it could never win. India is so far ahead in rocketry and satellite technology that it is better to call it quits now. In a sense, bad publicity received over the years — the hysterical headlines about the Islamic bomb

- has served Pakistan well. It stopped India in its tracks after the 1974 test and it alerted the world to Pakistan's scientific capabilities.

This state of equilibrium has brought new confidence. It was fortuitous that Mrs. Gandhi should be killed just when these feelings were taking shape. It gives the chance to put the Pakistan-India relationship on a new footing.

Sentiment in Pakistan has never put the last few screws in and set off a chain of events that might be been so sympathetic to India. Paki-stan is holding out a big clive branch. If Rajiv Gandhi is wise he will quickly move to reciprocate the feelings and use them to clear away the layers of carmity that have built up a psychological dividing wall in the 37 years since partition.

International Herald Tribune.

P AKISTAN has nothing but Iriendly intentions toward India and wishes to live in peace and cooperation. Pakistan has assiduously been seeking normal relations and, to this end, bas taken a number of initiatives because it firmly believes that it is through amity and peace that the interests of the two countries can be best served. Proposals such as a nonaggression treaty and reduction in forces are directed toward establishing lasting, stable peace in the subcontinent.

A country with such a constructive record cannot be pected to act otherwise at a time when India mourns the tragic death of its beloved leader. Far from trying to exploit the situation, Pakistan has shown sympathy and understanding and held out assurances of peace and support for the ongoing process of normalization. It is our sincere hope that India would soon be able to get over its problems and life would return to normal. Stability and peace in India are not only in the interest of India itself but also of Pakistan and the whole region. Pakistan wishes to see tension and conflict barrished from the subcontinent, which sorely, needs to divert its scarce resources for the amelioration of the lot of its teeming millions. To obtain this objective Pakistan is willing to extend its active cooperation to India and expects the same from it.

Term Two: More Than Jawboning?

By Tom Wicker

HOUSTON — The day before he was re-elected. President Reagan said in Sacramento that his first priority for a second term was peace, disarmament," including a nuclear arms control agreement with the Soviet Union. Now the press and the public solemnly debate whether he can reach those goals, when the-record suggests that he has about as much chance to do so as Walter Mondale had to win on Nov. 6.

No one doubts that Mr. Reagan wants peace — probably more than ever as he nears his last term and his 74th birthday. The problem is in how, he means to achieve it with an administration whose strongest voices are at best ambivalent about arms control and at worst opposed to it.

In an election day interview with Lou Cannon of The Washington Post (IHT, Nov. 7), Mr. Reagan stressed his hopes for peace — but inadvertently disclosed how little his first term had taught him. He repeated for example, his old theme that the Russians will soon abandon the arms race for negotiations because "they know there are difficulties in matching us industrially in such a buildup." Apparently, nothing in four years has suggested to the president what virtually every authority on Soviet affairs: has concluded: that the arms race pinches the Soviet economy but the Kremlin will do what it has to do to maintain military parity.

Mr. Reagan further asserted that the stress of the arms race would cause Moscow "to see the commonsense value in us achieving a mutual deterrence at a lower level — by reducing the weapons instead of keep-ing on building them."
What would cause the Russians to see that, when the United States continues to build the MX, the Midget-man, the Trident, the B-1, the Stealth bomber, cruise missiles and thousands more nuclear warheads? Just this week the U.S. Air Force tested its new anti-satellite weapon. The idea that the United States can keep on building up while persuading or fore-ing the Soviet Union to build down is the fatal contradiction that has been at the heart of Mr. Reagan's arms control policy for four years - and apparently still is.

The president also expressed what Mr. Cannon called "an unrelenting commitment" to his Strategic Defense Initiative, the so-called star wars' defense against nuclear mis-siles. The SDI, Mr. Reagan blithely declared, would provide an incentive to the Russians to reduce or climinate. their missile forces because it would make the United States "invulnerable" to attack by those forces. This view confirms how bitle Mr. Reagan knows about even his own roposals. Administration experts have testified to Congress that "star wars" may not work; it will take $26 billion or more just to find out. At best, these experts say, it will be 90percent effective; but 10 percent of a 5,000-warhead attack, which Moscow could make, is 500 warheads and curtains for most of Reagan Country.

Besides, against an only partial de-fense the real incentive for Moscow would be to build not fewer but more missiles and warheads in order to overwhelm that defense. If, moreover, the Russians intend to launch a nuclear attack, they need hardly wait to do so until a 90-percent-effective desense is in place. Nor are they likely to let the United States build such a defense without building their own. That he continues to see missile defense as the road to arms control and "deterrence at a lower level" let alone to "peace, disarmament" — suggests that Mr. Reagan has not really thought through these subjects. In fact, his ignorance about them, his unwillingness or inability to master their complexities, is the most dis-couraging disclosure in a detailed book about the Reagan administration's conduct of arms control talks. Strobe Talbott, author of "Deadly Gambits" (and before that of "Endgame," an account of arms control in the Carter administration), provides an authoritative picture of a Reagan administration staffed mostly with officials interested only in appearing serious about arms control, and who have no intention to reach an agreement unless it permits the president's military buildup to proceed unimpeded. And the book shows a president whose sophistication on arms control rises barely to the level of distinguishing between ballistic missiles as "fast-flyers" and cruise missiles as "slow-flyers."

Nor does Mr. Talbott let readers forget that the Soviet side is just as self-righteous, indifferent to truth, suspicious, determined and interested in its own military advantage as the Reagan administration. Who can believe that such adversaries will ever give peace a chance?

A Better, Canadian Way

styles between Canada's newly elected government and the Reagan administration are well worth watching. Both governments are primarily interested in economic reform. The Canadians face choices similar to Mr. Reagan's, and worse in the sense that their budget deficit is bigger, in relation to the size of their economy, and their unemployment is much higher. The differences are in their responses.

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has denounced the huge budget deficit in the most explicit terms. His finance minister, Michael Wilson, warned last week that Canada cannot expect just to grow out of it. "The simple fact is," he said, "that the mounting federal debt has become a powerful obstacle to growth and to private-sector job creation." That touches a couple of points upon which President Reagan and his secretary of the Treasury, Donald Regan, remain conspicuously ambivalent.

Another difference: Mr. Mulroney has gone to some lengths to assure Canadians that be is not going to try to knock holes in their comprehensive, expensive system of social benefits. There will not be anything like Mr. Reagan's raids on the food stamp money. Mr. Mulroney thinks that the Canadian government has become too big, but he keeps repeating that fairness will be the criterion for the cuts. He has proposed a few rather minor ones, including a token cut in his own salary, and he is going to increase the national sales tax. But that is only a beginning. And there we come to another interesting difference, Mr. Reagan has always blamed the deficit on the allegedly spendthrift Congress, as though his signature were not on every one of those appropriation bills. Mr. Mulroney holds the more subtle, and more accurate, view that deficits arise from uncontrolled infighting among all the special interests - the regions, provincial governments, industries, unions and every kind of citizens' lobby - that compete for federal money, Mr. Reagan is trying to cut the American budget by imposing his administration's own values on everybody else. It does not seem to be working. Mr. Mulroney is going to try another method, a series of consultations throughout his country to work toward a common purpose. The word "consensus" ared dozens of times in last week's outpouring of Canadian fiscal policy papers. It's a curious spectacle, isn't it? Here you see two of the world's richest countries - rich beyond the imagination of any previous generation - sinking into deeper and deeper trouble because they cannot bring themselves to pay their bills. Both are anxiously searching for a way out. The Canadian method, at this point, seems a good deal more promising.

For Peace in Central America

The Reagan administration has no policy toward the Sandinist government of Nicaragua. Some factions within the administration are pressing for using more military force against it. Other factions more prudently want to stick to diplomatic and economic pressure. The president has not chosen between the two.

In indecision lies danger. The proponents of forceful action will have the advantage over their more cautious colleagues. In an administration that overemphasizes the Soviet component of the unrest in Central America and underrates the indigenous causes, the prophets of force will gain an ideological edge.

The president must get hold of his administration. The people did out give him 49 states in order to slip and slide into military misadventures in Central America.

Soviet influence in Central America is not without perils. Neither is the hardening of the Sandinist revolution into leftist tyranny. There are mechanisms for dealing with both that are appropriate. The regional diplomatic approach is the one to make. The Contadora group is working toward a solution, but U.S. support is dubious at best. In the meantime the pressure of the U.S.-backed "contras," the rumors out of Washington about MiGs and Nicaraguan invasious of its neighbors and the thudding of sonic booms over Managua serve only to enable the Sandinists to whip up revolutionary fervor and consolidate their power. The United States has long-range interests in Central America that transcend the Sandinists and will outlast them. To intervene militarily in Central America once again would do grave harm to U.S. self-interest. To continue to balk at the diplomatic path would strengthen the band of those who would intervene.

The United States must forswear all thought of overthrowing the Sandinists, concentrate through diplomatic means in Central America - and in Moscow - on confining them and, with the Contadora group, use such pressure as can be had to push them toward democracy. The president managed to go four years without a coberent policy toward Central America. But now he must choose. The choice is clear, and the choice is urgent.

and treasury and most other cabinet officials are staying put. The White House staff, despite rumbles, shies away from pastures new. But while the cast of characters remains much the same, the focus of action shifts significantly. The top priority in foreign policy goes to dealing with the Russians, particularly on arms control. Secretary of State George Shultz and Robert McFarlane, the national security adviser, are the men for that task Their primacy was underlined when they, and they alone, conferred with the president at the White House in the first foreign policy session since the election. Earlier their status had been boosted by the knocking down of reports that some third person would handle the Russian account as a kind of arms control czar. Improving relations with the Soviet Union, of course, cannot go handin-hand with a crisis in Central America. The hard-liners in the Pen-tagon and the Central Intelligence Agency, worried that peace was breaking out, have been using scare a confrontation with Nicaragua.

They led off with reports of increased Soviet aid to Nicaragua, including MiG fighters. They then circulated rumors that the United States that optimistic estimates of the defi- ocratic leaders in Congress favor cutragua: interdict Soviet shipments to the country, increase military maneuvers in the area; supply fresh funds for the "contra" guernilas. Events have now falsified most of the rumors. The fact is that negotiations continue between a special State Department envoy, Harry Shlaudeman, and the Sandinists. So does work on the Contadora treaty for neutralization of Nicaragua, which has been proposed by Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela and Panama.

The upshot is that the hard-liners have once again shown their incompetence in Central America. They look silly, and come away discredited. The albatross hangs especially around the neck of the CIA. The agency has been caught trying to push out the Sandinist regime in direct violation of presidential and congressional prescriptions.

On the domestic side, the urgent priority is closing the mounting deficits. Inevitably that brings back to center stage the director of the Office of Management and Budget, David would recall its ambassador to Nica- cits, favored by others, have been superseded by his gloomier ones. Last week he told Mr. Reagan and the cabinet that the shortfall forecast for the year starting Oct. 1 would be $210 billion. That contrasts with an earlier estimate of $190 billion.

Support for the lower numbers has come chiefly come from the Treasury and Secretary Donald Regan. Their argument has been that economic growth, by itself, would crode the deficit. But the secretary, a presidential loyalist if ever there was one, has recently been silent.

Closing the deficit inevitably links the administration with Congress. This linkage provides the power base for the leading figures in the White House staff, the chief of staff, James Baker, and his sidekick, Richard Darman. Their strong suit — the one thing they can do that nobody else in the White House can manage well — is working with Congress.

Already the elements are at hand for the kind of deal that Mr. Baker and Mr. Darman particularly like to cut. The administration wants to re-Stockman, A sign of his strength is duce social spending, while the Dem-play leading roles as bridge-builders. The right-wing ideologues on the White House staff and in Congress would be bypassed. An accord on closing the deficit would emerge from the working group with enough momentum to sweep through Congress. Firm decisions have yet to be made. ## The Young May Need a Healthy Dose of Pessimism

PRINCETON, New Jersey — The alarming increase in teen-age suicides in America has caused widespread concern. The primary focus of studies will be on the psychopathology of the victims, actual and poten-tial. But there are two other factors to be taken into consideration.

First, the intensity of the epidemic in certain communities suggests that locality may be involved. The coun-ties in New York State in which the rash of teen-age suicides is at its worst are noted for their affluence. Are the young who grow up in com-munities in which the satisfactions that most people have to strive for are readily available deprived of some of the challenges essential to maturity?

The will to live requires the stimulus of resistance to develop its strength. Those who live in conditions in which they do not have to contend with resistance will tend to seek satisfactions derived not from the effort to overcome resistance but from narcotic escape from it.

This seems to be borne out by the statistics around the world. The lowest suicide rate is in Egypt (0.3 percent per 100,000 population). Near the other end of the scale is Sweden, which takes care of its citizens from womb to tomb and yet suffers a sui-cide rate of 18.6 per 100,000.

Second, it may be desirable to look beyond the immediate social situation to what may be called the metaphysical situation. This is not to suggest that teen-agers contemplating suicide necessarily ponder deep questions concerning the meaning and purpose of life, but such questions have a way of intruding into people's lives not as a theme for reflection but as a stimulus to their hopes and fears. The new interest in learning foreign languages is a welcome develop-ment, which Americans living overseas appreciate especially.

The Federation of American Women's Clubs Overseas seeks effective solutions to problems of living abroad, and high on the list of priorities is cultural adaptation. We know that speaking even a few words of a foreign language makes us feel more at home and implies respect for and

The Tables

China, Glass and Silverware

Millions of dollars are spent every year, especially during the forthcoming festive season, on the worldrenowned names in porcelain, silverware, crystal and other fine examples of the 'Art of the Table'. But why is there this craving for Baccarat champagne glasses, Meissen figurines or a Minton tea service? Is it a very real need felt by passionate admirers of quality hand craftsmanship to collect such items for their home? Or could it be, as Roland Dorschner, Chairman of the Managing Board of Hutschenreuther A.G. claims, that fine tableware constitutes "an inseparable part of communications in the home" (a refreshing change from the personal computer)? Or can this massive expenditure on luxury products for the table simply be explained by the innate tendency to snobbishness of the haute bourgeoisie to vaunt their choice of superior quality tableware? And indeed, the setting of a table with its rich, shiny silverware, wafer-thin porcelain and glittering array of hand-crafted crystal provides as erudite a description as any of not only the type of meal and conversation, formal and less so, to be expected, but also the personality, lifestyle and taste of the host.

Perhaps the sole reason for buying expensive, top quality tableware is simply to admire its beauty and, whether the table is in Bahrain or Belgium, New York or the Netherlands, with the wealth of choice of exquisite china, crystal and silverware available to the consumer, surely the only dilemma posed is what to choose.

> A Shopper's Guide to Paradise by Ashley Starr.

Translucent china, shimmering crystal, gleaming silver, splendid chandeliers dancing a thousand lights - place settings fit for the gods glitter from every shop window along the rue de Paradis. Seldom has a street been more aptly named. For over one hundred years, this street, which runs for more than one-third of a mile between the Faubourg St-Denis and the Faubourg Poissonière in Paris' 10th arrondissement, has been a shopper's paradise specializing in the Arts of the Table.

"The rue de Paradis is unique in the world," says Albert Madronet, President of the Rue Paradis Association, a group comprising the approximately thirty shops and twenty manufacturers represented on the street, "Not only is the choice here unequalled anywhere else, but pricewise we are about 10 per cent below the department stores except when they run special promptions."

Madronet, whose family opened their first store here in 1932, now owns six separate. shops and has been working on the street since 1945. "In that time I have had some of the most famous people in the world as clients: Eisenhower, Eva Peron, Pope John XXIII, heads of state, embassies including some Russian ambassadors, and innumerable kings, queens, sultans and maharajahs from all the royal houses in Europe and beyond."

The links of the rue de Paradis to royalty, however, go much further back. The street, in existence since 1643, has a colorful history. It became known as the rue de Paradis from 1659 on because of its proximity to a local cemetery and was officially named only in 1881. An adjoining street was known as the rue d'Enfer (street of hell) until the residents got tired of being called "the damned". They got it changed to the rue Bleue in 1789. Its royal connections began during the reign of Louis XVI, when the king's there, presided over by the demand for the best French celebrated chef of kings, Antonin Careme.

Later Corot, the 19th century landscape painter, had his atelier here. By then the street had become the epitome of haute bourgeoisie and was the chic residential Parisian suburb. Many dukes and marshalls had their private homes here including Adolphe Mortier, Duc de Trevise, better known as the husband of the outspoken "Madame Sans-Gène."

When Baccarat was founded porcelsin was so fierce that entrepreneurs bought factories in Limoges in order to keep up with the orders. Four manufacturers, Havilland, Streisman and Voth, Arenfeldt and Guerin, were American-owned and each day trains used to leave Limoges for Le Havre, filled with china destined for New York. the new era for the street, but not known how to evolve," as Madronet puts it, "The United States buyers now buy most of makers installed an atelier at their fine porcelain from England and Japan, or go to Germany and the Scandinavian countries for contemsive than at home. With more than thirty shops to choose between, distinguishing one from another can seem a daunting task. Many foreign visitors spend the day here, wandering from shop to shop, checking out the stock and prices. "The average American buyer will spend two to two and one-half hours making a purchase," says Madronet. "A French client does it all in half an hour."

One way to start is to visit the showrooms, where the manufacturer's ranges are displayed, but are not for sale. When you find something you want, the showroom will direct you to the proper retail outlet. SELB, WEST GERMANY - In 1814 a porcelain decorator by the name of Carolus Magnus Huts-chemicuther opened a small work-without saying that I should want without saying that I should want to work with porcelain, one of the most noble materials.

Hutschenreuther's main area of activity is porcelain for use in households, hotels and restaurants. The Hueschenreuther brandna is used for traditional, time-tested designs while Arzberg is for modcm styling for everyday use.

Also belonging to Hutschen-reuther are the brandname Alt

Tirschenreuth and the traditional firm of Theresienthal which makes crystal glass as well as porce-cialise in supplying high-quality hotel porcelain. Hutschenreuther also produces technical porcelain products for industrial use. Developing and using modern technol-ogy is part of the Hutschenreuther operation, and the firm has become an exponer of know-how in porceporcelain factory in Thailand, which it is helping to build and start production. The original company also went public, two years after the younger firm, and expanded its production plants into what is now Eastern Europe and which were lost to the company after World War Two. By the end of the 1960's, son Lorenz's company had 2,300 employ-ees while the father's enterprise only had about 2 thousand. In 1969 father and son were rejoined in one-company, Hurschenreuther AG. The new Hutschenreuther company grew rapidly. Its merger with Kahla AG in 1972 was a spectacu-lar event for the whole industry. The merger added the "Araberg" and "Schoenwald" patterns and two planes making potectain for sanitary facilities. Hutschenreuther became the market leader in Ger-

They carry the hand-painted plates and cups and saucers of French craftsman Le Tallec, who is exclusive to Tiffany's and widely appreciated in the U.S. They also have a selection of the delightful Capodimonte figures and decorative lanterns and chandeliers from Italy.

At Porcelainor, no 31, the spotlight shines on the 19th century shapes of Rosenthal's Classic Rose collection. Porcelainor are the first in France to carry this popular line, already possessed by the Queen of the Netherlands, the Vatican and many other heads of state. Americans favor the rococco curves of the Sans-Souci shape with the voliere bird motif pattern. French buyers prefer the more classical Monbijon shape and a floral pattern. Classie Rose giftware, exacting reproductions of the Ching period, complete the collection.

Across the street at Madronet Contemporain, the stunning designs of Rosenthal's Studio Linie reign supreme. Victor Vasarely heads a list of internationally known designers whose Rosenthal creations are on sale here. Especially charming: The brightly colored Christmas plates of Bjorn Winhlad and his fabulous Opera glass series, illustrations of Mozart's "Magic Flute" hand-engraved in gold.

The French Country look can be found at La Tisanière, at no. 35, a charming and cozy sbop with an extensive array of white country porcelain.

More and more of the famous names in fashion -Givenchy, Castelbajac, Sonia Rykiel, Daniel Hechter, Paco Rabanne, Leonard and Cacherel - have turned to tableware design. Hermes recently launched a pink and green peony service based on one of the best-selling silk scarves.

Theresienthal's art reached a high point at the beginning of this century, in the art nouveau period and some of the firm's current selection of crystalware date back to this period.

Famous for producing crys tal products from the great art epochs, Theresienthal also recreates the styles of the baroque and the Biodermeier, the German equivalent of the British Regency and the French Empire from 1820 to 1840. Theresienthal also taps the not-so-distant past in its use of the Bauhaus style.

At this year's Autumn Fair in Frankfurt, Theresienthal introduced its new crystal pattern, "Juwel", created by C. Holmgren of Copenhagen. This pattern has a contemporary appearance that is given a traditional flair through delicate engravings (the pattern is available without the engravings). The pattern also comes with a polished gold rim and a handpainted gold motif.

275 Years of Craftsmanship at Meissen

by Clotilde Lucey.

MEISSEN - The term "manufactory", sounds almost as outdated as the craftsmanship with which it is synonymous, that of creating fine chinaware by hand. Manufactories are in themselves exceedingly rare in our technically and industrially highly advanced age. One of the oldest and best known is situated in a small town near Dresden in the German Democratic Republic and called Meissen. The name of the town is synonymous with the products of its famous manufactory, Meissen Porcelain. The Meissen Porcelain Manufactory was founded in the year 1710 by August The Strong, Elector of Saxony and King of Poland and is soon to celebrate its 275th Anniversary.

Cheap Imports and Imitations Cracking the Market

by Clotilde Lucey.

SELB. WEST GERMANY -The porcelain industry in West Germany and the rest of Europe is facing increasing pressure from chesp imports but most of all from imitations arriving from the Far East. These imports have reached such a high volume that they constitute a serious danger to the industry, Roland Dorschner, Chairman of the Managing Board of Hutschenporcelain company said lowpriced chinaware from the Far East has already acquired a five per cent share of the European market. "That means that every second piece of porcelain that is placed on the table in Germany is from the Far East," Mr. Dorschner noted. "Twenty years ago the import share was five per duct development and marketing launch. The countries in the Far East profit from that and from our know-how that we have acquired during many years of work in the areas of technology and product range. At the present time there is no effective way to block the theft of our ideas and our designs. At the same time, the so-called newly industrialized countries have tariff privileges in the Federal Republic, although these countries have become fully competitive and no longer need such protection.

Q.: What action do you propose to take?

A.: Legal action against copiers and imitators is almost useless or can only be brought into effect from a distance. Therefore, first we must insist on the introduction of an identification of origin for all imported tableware and ornaments made from porcelain, earthenware and fine ceramics. If possible, this identification should be stamped member countries in the Common Market, agreements on voluntary restrictions should be made with newly industrialized countries.

Q.: Is it possible to bring that into effect?

A.: We are making every effort to do so. It is a matter of security for thousands of jobs in the (economically underdeveloped) east-west border

In addition to requests made to the Federal Economics Ministry we are considering financing a joint promotion of the fine ceramics industry in the Federal Republic, perhaps through the Ministry. The consumer can and should be made more aware of the problem. The beautifully set table that we offer the consumer is an inseparable part of communications in the home. We, as producers of fine porcelain in the Federal Republic and in Europe, want to continue to contribute to the home environment and with it to the well-being of people.

All this is a miserable waste. Yet t should not obscure the fact that the current exhibition is a sweeping

Zao Wou-ki has had his niche in the Western art world for more than 30 years: that of an Eastern artist speaking the language of Western abstraction or, conversely, a Western artist speaking with an Oriental inflection. His latest canvases at the Galerie de France are unfashionably beautiful. They are single, double or evern triple panels with a broad sweep of space and a certain luxury of color and ouance. There are also some hlack-brush drawings, one of which admirahly illustrates how abstraction and representation are in the eye of the beholder. ROME — The art season in Rome, always late to start, has finally opened with an array of international big-timers showing contemporary sculpture.

Kounellis, who has long been a member of the international avantgarde, offers a retrospective of his work of the past 10 years.

The Greek-born Kounellis has an uncanny awareness of the range of materials that surrounds him. In the '50s, George Segal was one of the main exponents of Pop Art in America. The woman at the stove, the man in the bathroom, the clutch of office workers descending into the subway - all were cast exactly as they were in real life.

The way we move without thinking - without color, without romantic frills, ordinary gestures in ordinary moments — were arrested and isolated. The tableaux turned the familiar into something extraordinary, pinpointing common life and thus transcending it.

Lately, Segal has concentratedon casting only fragments of the body—an arm cradling a pregnant. belly, a hand lying near a breast

But there is a dearth of originals in his two shows in Rome, Except for a figure seated by a cafe table, some heads, some of the new fragments and some pastels, there are only pressed-paper multiples and lithographs at Il Ponte.

E. Europe Experience Casts Is to Run Doubt on China's Changes

By ARTHUR N. WALDRON

ELIEF is growing that the Chinese mainland is going to be able to follow the economic development path blazed by such stars as Singapore, Hong Kong and Taiwan. It is a belief founded chiefly on the similarities among the populations: all are of Chinese origin, all are enterprising, therefore, it seems, all should be successful.

But such an approach ignores two questions that are as critical for China today as they were for the other three more than 20 years ago. The first concerns the nature of the economic reforms: will those that Deng Xiaoping is imposing in China today prove anything like as effective as, for example, those that K.Y. Yin and others devised for Taiwan 25

economy can work in a socialist society is questionable.

decentralized

years ago? The second concerns politics: effective or not, will Mr. Deng's reforms en-

Certainly the latest reforms represent drastie change for China, but they have plenty of precedents elsewhere in the world. Nor has China introduced capitalism, as so many commentators mistakenly believe, or anything remotely like the free-economic systems of the successful modernizing states of Chinese origin already mentioned.

Mr. Deng's reforms are radical only by Chinese standards. It has been newsworthy lately that Chinese peasants are permitted to sell some of their crops privately, not because such sales by peasants are unusual elsewhere, but because they are a radical departure from Chinese communist practice. Reporters have filed stories about privately owned restaurants in Beijing not because such restaurants are rare in other countries, but because they used to be illegal in China

UCH measures are part of an attempt to introduce some market mechanisms and greater enterprise autonomy into China's socialist economy, and thus improve efficiency and

The changes resemble those that were made in Hungary from January 1968, with exactly the same purpose. Those reforms undeniably improved Hungary's economic performance, putting it near the head of the Eastern European class, but they wrought no miracles. Hungary has set no records.

Quite the opposite. It has been by studying Hungary that economists have come to understand just how basic are the difficulties of achieving what China's "socialist modernization" aims for - making the economy efficient while keeping it

It used to be that many agreed with the argument first made by the Polish economist Oskar Lange in 1938, that there was no contradiction between the two goals. An efficient, decentralized ecooomy, he maintained, could fit without difficulty into a socialist society. If that were so, China would at least know that the road on which she is setting out exists and leads somewhere.

But the recent experience of Eastern Europe has raised some serious doubts. It is hard to reconcile such socialist principles as "equal pay for equal work" with a situation brought about by stress on efficiency where workers in a profitable factory may earn more through profit-sharing than equally hard-working employees of a less well-managed or less fortunate enterprise.

A contemporary Hungarian economist, Janos Kornai, who has analyzed such problems in detail, states flatly that "conflicts are inevitable between the conditions ... of efficiency, on the one principles ... of the other."

It has proved very difficult to run a truly efficient economy in socialist Hungary, this despite well-thought-out regulations that are clearly designed to foster economic rationality. Theory and practice are very different. Price discipline, for example, may look strict on paper, but in practice enterprise managers, tax officials, and bankers engage in a process of give and take that attenuates it. The problems that plague Hungary are bound to Western China-watchers are already drawing the parallels. Columbia University sociology professor Andrew Walder, for (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Statoil Oil Field

Oslo Ousts Mobil From Statfjord

OSLO — The Norwegian government has averted a split in the ruling three-party center-right coalition by allowing a Norwegian company to take over operation of the country's biggest oil field. Statoil, the state-owned oil commy, is to take over operation of the Statiford field off central Norway from Mobil Corp. of the United States between January 1987 and January 1989, a government spokesman said Thursday. Mobil, responsible for making Statiford Norway's most profitable field, has resisted the move and said in an open letter to the govern-ment Thursday that safety and eco-nomic factors made a changeover possible before 1995.

Norway's Center Party, a minority partner in the coalition, had threatened to bring about a government defeat in a parliamentary vote unless Statoil was made operator of the field, parliamentary sources said. But the main opposition Labor Party also gave its support to Statoil, and a defeat would have been a serious blow to Prime Minister Kaare Willoch's dominant Conservative Party.

Mr. Willoch, who formed the coalition last year after two years of minority government, faces a general election next autumn.

The government spokesman said the Statoil takeover would take place as soon it was safe and the two companies would have to oegotiate a reasonable transition. Foreign oil companies operating on the Norwegian continental shelf have been watching the Statfjord case with considerable interest. Energy analysts said the foreign operators would be disappointed by Oslo's decision.

International companies have argued that Norway favors Statoil and the two other Norwegian com-panies, Saga Petroleum and Norsk Hydro, by giving them the best exploration opportunities.

Senior government sources said Thursday that the British government, which owns about 20 percent of the Statiford oil because the field straddles the two nations' borders. cision to change operators.

Iran-U.S. Hearings Stumble On But Panel's Slowness Irks Many

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — When two Iranian judges pummeled a Swedish colleague two mooths ago at the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal in The Hague, they apparently were expressing a dissatisfaction that many participants in the process share, Perhaps inevitably, nobody is very happy with the claims tribunal, which has the chore of mopping up after one of the most frustrating episodes in U.S. history. The tribunal's task really began five years ago last Wednesday, when Iran an-nounced that it would withdraw all its money from U.S. banks. After predawn meetings with adminis-tration officials, President Jimmy Carter froze all Iranian assets in American banks, including their branches abroad.

Over the next 14 months these assets furnished most of the chips in the bargaining to release the American diplomats being held hostage in Tehran. After the hostages were released and the assets unfrozen, $1 billion remained in a special account from which the tribunal could make awards.

In its decisions, some lawyers say, the tribunal is making significant contributions to international law. In particular, it has held that Iran must fully compensate foreigners whose property it expropriated. This shores up a traditional rule of internatiooal law that has been under growing ettack in the last two decades.

Of the 3,848 claims filed — all but a few brought by Americans against Iran — the great majority are still undecided. One claimant alone prepared nearly 800 pounds (363.6 kilograms) of documents, and so far the tribunal has pared relatively little from the mountain of paper. Fewer than a third of the Americans' 518 large claims — those for more than $250,000 -have been resolved. And the smaller claims, which outnumber the large ones by 5-to-1, have hardly been touched.

So far about half of the U.S. claims to come before the tribunal have been dismissed and few

Iran could have used the sovereign immunity and "act of state" defenses — which generally make it difficult to win against a foreign government - in U.S. courts, But those defenses are not available before the tribunal, Mr. Rovine ex-

The panel has awarded $306 million to Americans, almost all of which has been paid ont of the $1-billion fund. Meanwhile, more than $400 million has accumulated in interest, which is paid into a separate account. Iran cannot withdraw the interest income and this will probably be used to replenish the fund when it sinks to $500 million. Iran is obligated to replenish the fund when it slips below that level.

The two biggest awards so far went to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International, a unit of R.J. Reynolds Industries, which recovered $49.8 million, and American Insurance Group, which received almost $14 million. Both those sums included large amounts of interest. Starrett Housing Corp. has also succeeded before the tribunal and experts are now assessing its loss for the tribunal so that an award can be made.

"There's e great sense of frustration with the pace of the proceedings," said Michael Silverman, a lawyer in the Washington firm of Surrey & Morse who has argued several cases in The Hague. He said the proceedings could drag out for another decade.

Further delays resulted when Judge Nils Mangard was attacked on Sept. 3, the first day after the summer recess. The two Iranian judges, Mahmoud Kashani and Shafei Shafeici, reportedly lay in wait for the Swedish jurist in front of the meeting room. Mr. Kashani was said to have grabbed Mr. Mangard's collar and shaken him while Mr. Shafeici pummeled Mr. Mangard, 69, oo the back.

BASF Says Profit Rose by 75% in First 3 Quarters

By Warren Getler

International Herald Tribune LUDWIGSHAFEN, Wesi Germany — BASF AG is on course for record profit this year, after the West German chemical group's pretax profit surged 75.6 percent to .84 billion Deutsche marks ($62 billion) in the first three quarters from 1.05 billion DM a year earlier, Hans Albers, the managing board chairman, has reported.

Mr. Albers said Thursday that there was a strong prospect of 1984 pretax profit rising 50 percent above 1983's 1.68-billion-DM result. But be cautioned that group profit next year could drop below 1984 levels because of what is expected to be a significant slowdown in sales growth.

"In 1985, we probably woo't achieve the very high, two-digit growth in sales" experienced this year, Mr. Albers said.

World group sales, boosted by strong exports and benefiting more from volume than from marginal price increases, rose 16.4 percent to 30.07 billion DM in the first nine months from 25.83 billion DM a year earlier and are expected to top 40 billion DM, Mr. Albers said. Last year, BASF reported sales of 35.t1 billion DM for the world

Profits were strongest among crop protection products and fibers, and the group's overall result was aided significantly by a 40pereeot reductioo in fertilizer

Also contributing to the record 9-month result, Mr. Albers said, was a return to profit by BASF's plastics business. Refinery opera-tions, as well as tape and videocassette production, continued to show significant losses.

Mr. Albers said BASF experienced a "golden October" and a strong November in sales. He ex-pressed confidence that 1985 results will be bolstered by a dollar that will remain strong against the Deutsche mark. He also said he expects West Germany's economic recovery to contioue next year at a rate close to this year's projected 2.5 percent growth io gross nation-

News of the spurt in pretax earn-ings failed to lift BASF shares in Frankfurt; they closed unchanged Friday at 169.80. Industry sources said the jump in chemical profits as reflected Wedoesday by Hoechst's 60-percent rise to 2.119 billion DM — had been widely anticipated. Further downward pressure on shares of the Big Three ehemical companies — BASF, Hoechst and Bayer — comes from a sense among investors that the groups results have peaked, the sources said. BASF shares have also been dampened by widespread specula-tion that formaldehyde, of which BASF is the world's largest producer, may cause cancer. Mr. Albers, asked about the speculation, said no cancer cases had been reported among BASF employees. He said BASF was complying with stringent safety regulations imposed by the federal authorities after the cootroversy began last summer. Formaldehyde (Continued on Page 13, Col. 4)

U.K. Inflation Increased to 5% During October

The Associated Press LONDON - Britain's annual inflation rate rose to 5 per-cent in October, a jump of 0.3 perceot over the previous month, the Department of Em-ployment said Friday. On a monthly basis, prices rose by 0.6 percent during October from September.

But officials said the rate should have dropped again by the end of this month because of cuts by British building societies, or savings-and-loan institutions, in their mortgage rate. The 1-percent cut announced last week will bring most mort-gages down to 11.75 percent. The main reason for the October jump in inflation, the department said, was a rise in the price of gasoline, but inflation was also pushed up by higher housing costs.

Some goods fell in price, including furniture, clothes and fruit, the department said.

Tom King, the secretary of state for employment, said that by the end of the year, inflation should be down to the govern-ment's 4.75-percent target for the final quarter of the year.

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The U.S.

Defense Department has made public a previously secret list of technologies regarded as militarily critical that may not be exported to the Soviet Union, its allies or nations with the potential for acquiring nuclear weapons.

Publication of the list, which has been revised annually since it was first drawn up in 1980, is part of the Reagan administration's widening effort to slow or stop the flow of what it considers to be militarily useful technology to the Soviet Union and its allies.

The list includes know-how such as for computers, software and telecommunications - and two broad categories, "keystone equipment" and "keystone materithat appeared to apply to e wide range of products.

A memorandum accompanying the list said the previous secrecy "not only hindered the utility and application of the Militarily Critical Technologies List but also raised unjustified fears in the academic world and the public at large about the scope of the list." The memorandum also said the list "will aid voluntary efforts to restrict the flow of critical technology" to the Soviet bloc.

The Defense Department recently published a directive forbidding the release of previously available information about militarily critical technologies if the department considered that information to be

Mr. Albers said BASF will increase investment at its U.S. subsidiaries by more than 30 percent, to 336 million DM, from 255 million this year.

Total capital investment by the group is to rise 20 percent in 1985 to 2 billion DM.

Mr. Albers said BASF feels no immediate threat from shipments of petrochemicals that have been coming in increasing quantities from the Gulf. He said those shipments amount to only 5 percent of the total market and are apt to increase by little more than I percent over the next few years. He cautioned, however, that the European Commission should be prepared to take measures to forestall any disruption of competitive conditions should the Middle East suppliers attempt to dramatically increase their sales in Europe and elsewhere by undercutting prices.

BASF will maintain its strength against new competition, Mr. Albers said, by focusing much of its Mr. Albers noted that BASF production on specialized, highvalue chemicals such as polyethyl-been unhappy with all their col-leagues, special animosity was reserved for Mr. Mangard. The tribunal consists of three Iranian judges, three U.S. judges and three jodges of other nationalities. The Iranian judges almost always vote for the Iranian side and the American judges usually vote for the American side, so the neutral judges often cast the decisive votes and consequently are under great pressure.

The proceedings were suspended after the attack, and the United States has formally requested the removal of Mr. Kashani and Mr. Shafeiei. But the Iranians reportedly want an arrangement under which the two Iranian judges would be replaced if Mr. Mangard and the Dutch judge, Willem Riphagen, were also changed.

Two semimonthly publications that report voluminously oo the tribunal, the Iranian Assets Liugation Reporter and Mealey's Litigation Report; Iranian Claims, have reported that Iran has already chosen replacements for its two judges. They are said to be Hamid Bahrami of the Bureau of International Legal Services in Tehran and a Judge Mostafavi of a public court in Tehran, Mr. Mostafavi's first name is the Litigation Report, said he had been told by sources in Tehran that the replacements would be ready: within two weeks. William Keough, editor of the Iranian Assets Litigation Reporter, which costs $2,000 a year, said the replacements might arrive later, because the Iranians want to delay the proceedings.

Another theory, offered by Mr. Rovine, the former U.S. agent to the tribunal, is that the Iranians are waiting until December. Mr. Mangard has long been expected to submit a letter of resignation then, effective next May or June, and so the Iranians could assert that they had succeeded in ejecting the Swedish jurist, Mr. Rovine said.

Notwithstanding the delays and an emphasis on compromise that exasperates some U.S. lawyers, the tribunal will leave a mark on international law, most experts say. In particular, dispute has focused on U.S. companies whose holdings were expropriated.

"This has been a very controversial area of international law for several decades, and I think their decisions will be enormously influential," said Brice Clagett, a Washington lawyer who has represented several companies before the tribunal and who is now writing two law journal articles on the subject.

The traditional rule in internamust be accompanied by "prompt, adequate and effective compensation." But some lawyers argue that the situation has changed, because of the development of a "new international economic order" and pas- da cities of Naples, Tampa, Miami, sage of several resolutions in the Key West, Fort Myers, Punta

DISCLOSING THE PAST: An Autobiography By Mary Leakey. Illustrated. 224 pp. $15.95.

Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue,

New York, N.Y. 10167. Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

N OBODY has a better right to an autobiography than Mary Leakey, for, together with her husband. Louis, she helped write the earliest part of mankind's hiography. When she received an honorary degree from Oxford University in 1981, the Public Orator observed, in Latin, that the Leakeys' work in the Olduvai Gorge in Tanzania had hrought science to "one of the threshholds of human life."

Honorary degrees were the only kind Mary Leakey received, for she was an incorrigible student. As she says herself, "I have failed every kind of examinatioo I have ever taken, except the first two parts of the gliding proficiency test." In the early 1930s, she was an enthusiastic member of a gliding club.

In "Disclosing the Past," Mary Leakey begins hy a fairly successful painter who traveled around Europe looking for appealing landscapes, so that her earliest memories are of Italy, Switzerland and especially the Dordogne section of France, where Louis's and Mary Leakey's discoveries necessarily overlapped, since they worked together, and there is still some controversy among archaeologists about the exact meaning of their work. Their finding at Olduvai Gorge of a significant part of a manlike skull known as Proconsul filled in a gap that had previously been only guessed at. Also at Olduvai, they came upon perfectly preserved footprints, belonging to the human classification, that were 3.5 million years old. By the mid-1960s, the Leakeys were world famous, with several best-selling books to their credit, and two of their sons were also well on their way to reputations in archaeology. Mixing some delicacy with her characteristic tartness, Mary Leakey describes the deterioration of her marriage. Perhaps all the publicity and the immensely popular personal appearances had gone to Louis's head, she writes. For whatever reason, he began reaching, in her opinion, for sensational conclusions — to such a degree that she no longer felt she could respect his work. They separated after 30 happy years, and when he died in 1972, she carried on alone.

Africa had changed so much that she found herself wishing for the prowling leopards and hlunderiog rhinos of 30 years ago. When the Tanzanian government began to intrude oo archaeologists' camps, she moved to Nairobi. It was time, she says, as she nears 70, to settle down and write up her results. "Unlike Louis," she observes, "I have never believed that knowledge of the past would help us to understand and possibly control the future." She goes on to say that "basically, I have been impelled by curiosity."

by curiosity."

She does herself an injustice. Her curiosity is the kind we need most. A knowledge of our shamhling and humble beginnings may temper our tendency to jump at conclusions.

Other Redskins, such as John Riggins, ignore the bumps and bruises of everyday football life to play as much as they can. But even Riggins has his human moments, one of which came last Sunday, when, pained by a sore back and hemorrhoids, the big running back sat out the 28-14 victory over the Riggins will be back in play this Sunday, when the Redskins, at 7-4 the co-leaders with Dallas in the National Conference's Eastern Division, play the Eagles (4-6-1) at Philadelphia (Harrab's Reno Race & Sports Book has made Washington a 7-point favorite.)

To some teams, losing a player of Riggins's caliber would be devastating. The Lions, for example, have two defeats and a ne since Billy Sims, their best running back, was lost for the season because of a knee injury.

The Redskins have been more fortunate. The absence of Riggins for a game, coupled with the loss of Joe Washington, who has been on the injured list for eight games with a knee injury, has not been so deeply felt.

As Riggins watched from the sideline in Washington, Keith Grif-fin, a rookie, ran 32 times for 114 yards and Otis Wonsley scored 3 tonebdowns in 6 carries against the

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

St. Louis Cardinals (6-5) at New York Giants (6-5) - Both teams, after losing last Sunday, oeed a victory to enotione realistic chances to make the playoffs. The teams' offensive tendencies are similar: Both throw better than they run. And the Cardinals are tougher on opposing quarterbacks, the Giants' linebacker Lawrence Taylor notwithstanding. (St. Louis is favored by 1 point.)

whose season really started three weeks ago. Since a 1-7 start, the Packers have defeated Detroit, New Orleans and Minnesota, and their offense has been working in high gear. The Rams have won four of their last five, including impressive victories over St. Louis and Chicago. Bot Nolan Cromwell, their outstanding strong safety, who had started 84 straight games, and George Andrews, the starting right-outside linebacker, are out for the season with knee injuries.

(Green Bay by 3.)
Detroit Lions (3-7-1) at Chicago Bears (7-4) — The Lions have won five of the last six games against the Bears, but that is not likely in happen again. The Lions have been awful this season. The Bears need at least two more victories to elinch the division title. They have four more games against divisioo opponents, including the rejuvenated Packers. (Chicago by 7.) Tampa Bay Buccaneers (4-7) at San Francisco 49ers (10-1) - The Buccaneers played well on defense and beat the Giants, 20-17, last Sunday. But the 49ers are even strooger now that Fred Dean, their outstanding pass rusher, has re-purned after holding out for a new contract. (San Francisco by 13.)

AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Kansas City Chiefs (5-6) at Los Angeles Raiders (7-4) - There is plenty amiss with the Los Angeles Raiders. The defending Super Bowl champions have lost three straight, jeopardizing their playoff chances. Both Raider quarterbacks are hurt. A sprained thumb made it difficult for Marc Wilson to throw deep in a Washington's running game—a has missed the last six games be-one-back scheme with tight ends in cause of pulled muscles in his abdomen. (Los Angeles by 9½.)

Miami Dolphius (11-0) at San Diego Chargers (5-6) — Despite the difference in their records, this could be a dangerous game for the victory by the Broncos, would put their last three games, and their every position, and now they are up against an energized Oiler team that gained its first victory last Sunday, 17-16 over the Chiefs. In that game, Warren Moon was not intercepted for the second straight game, which may be cause for alarm for the Jets. Among the positions most weakened by injury is cornerback. (New York by 5.) New England Patriots (7-4) at Indianapolis Colts (4-7) — This is a must game for the Patriots, who are competing with the Seahawks, the Raiders and possibly the Jets for a wild-card berth in the playoffs. New England has been errane three victories in its last five games and the Colts showed Sunday, in a 9-5 victory over the Jets, that they are capable of an impressive effort now and then. But the Patriots' offense is much better than the Jets' and their defense is healthier. (New England by 7.)

Seattle Seahawks (9-2) at Cincinnati Bengals (4-7) - This is one of those games that looks easy but probably will not be. The Seahawks did not overwhelm the Raiders, and the Bengals have won three of their last four games and four of their last six, and are only two games behind Pittsburgh in the AFC Central Division. #### INTERCONFERENCE

Cleveland Browns (2-9) at Atlanta Falcons (3-8) — About the only thing at stake here is pride. Cleveland has a better offense, a much better defense and a more recent victory. The Browns woo two weeks ago, against Buffalo; the Falcons last won six weeks ago, against the Rams. (Atlanta by 3.)

Dallas Cowboys (7-4) at Buffalo Bills (0-11) - The Bills have lost 13 straight games over two seasons and are two defeats away from tying a club record for consecutive losses. Further, they have not scored more than 10 points in ooe game in the last mooth, and, in three previous meetings, they have never beaten the Cowboys. Dallas, meanwhile, is plodding along, wioning three of its last four games but none impressively. Any prolonged lapse of concentration or execution, and they could make Buffalo's season. (Dallas by 9½.) Minnesota Vikings (3-8) at Denver Broncos (10-1) — The Broncos are one of those clubs that rely on offensive efficiency and timely takeaways by the defense. If that fine balance were to be knocked out of Scattle Seahawks, and Jim Plunkett whack, anything could happen. knocking remains to be seen. They have lost six of their last seven. mostly because of inept defense. On occasion, however, they have controlled the ball well and scored enough points in win, had the defense turned in a better game. (Denver by 91/2.)

"Isn't that the same as a tax?" "Wait a minute," he said, leafing through the pages. "No, it's just the opposite. We are going to reform the code so that people will pay less instead of more taxes."

"How do you plan to do it?" "Here it is on Page 12: 'One way to keep the tax base from rising is to stop people from deducting their state and city income taxes from their federal tax. By doing this the government should be able to make $30 billion on the deal."

"If people can't deduct state and city income taxes from their federal returns, they'll still be paying more at Ronald Reagan." than they did before.

Yes, but they'll get mad at the state and city officials and oot at ald Reagan is a nice guy, and nice us. They can't fault the president guys don't raise people's taxes."

Lord Lucan: Case of a Vanished Peer

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
ONDON — Ten years ago Richard John Bingham, the seventh Earl of Lucan, disappeared — and the mystery is as baffling oow as it was when the aristocratic gambler and murder suspect vanished.

Lord Lucan, a professional cardplayer and socialite, has not been seen since early on Nov. 8, 1974, hours after his children's nanny was battered to death and his wife beaten. An inquest jury named Lucan the killer.

How did Lucan get away and where is he now? Is he alive, or dead? Scotland Yard is no closer to having the answers today than when it opened its dossier a decade ago. Many people believe Lucan committed snicide. He is seen as a stiff, 19th-century figure, a man who could well have "fallen on his sword" after the final throw of the dice went against him.

Others, including his wife, lady Veronica Lucan, cling to the helief that he is alive.
"Debreut's Peerage," the bible of the British aristocracy, still records his coat of arms and family connections, coting laconically and with slight inaccuracy: "The 7th earl has been missing since Nov. 7th, 1974.' Many argue that Lucan was well connected and could easily have lost himself in a country that has no extradition treaty with Britain or where Britons would not arouse suspi-

The hunt for a figure whose lineage in-cludes the man who ordered the charge of the Light Brigade in the Crimean War has spread across the globe.

The possibility that Lucan is alive has sparked oumerous sightings in the past 10 years from Cherbourg, France, to Melbourne, Australia in 1975 to Cape Town, South Africa in 1976, Brazil in 1977, other places in South America in 1978, and back to Melbourne in 1979.

"We have an average of about 12 sightings a year," said a Scotland Yard spokesman, and we investigate all of them.

In 1979, a man believed to be Lord Lucan was arrested in Melbourne but he turned out to be a boilermaker from the east of England. Io 1982, an adventurer, John Miller, claimed he was holding the missing earl in the Caribbean. But the story was a hoax.

At one time, a team of 40 police officers worked on the case. They became known as the "oob squad" because their investigation brought them into contact with so many "oobs" - slang for members of the British upper class.

The police moved uncomfortably in that tightly knit world and gleaned little informa-

Lucan's life followed the traditional path for the British establishment - school at Eton, service with an elite Guards regiment and on to a job in finance in London. But after one big win at the gaming tables

he gave up work to become a professional ambler. His usual haunt was the Clermont Club, where he played chemin de fer and gained the nickname "Lucky Lucan." In 1964, he married. Lord and Lady Lucan had three children. But the relationship cooled and the couple separated in 1973.

There followed a bitter legal action for custody of the children. The court ruled against him and be was shattered by the blow. He drank heavily and lost badly at the tables.

On the night of Nov. 7, 1974, Lucan went to the family home in London's Belgravia district. He apparently believed that the chil-dren's nanny. Sandra Rivett, would be off for the evening and that his wife would be alone. But that night the nanny had a cold and stayed m.

Lucan went to the basement kitchen, removed the lightbulb and waited for his wife to come to make an evening pot of tea.

This time, however, the nanny volunteered to make the tea. As she stepped into the kitchen, she was bludgeoned to death with a length of pipe and her body stuffed into a mailbag.

Lady Lucan, investigating the delay, was also attacked but managed to struggle free. With blood pouring down her face, she fled to a local pub, the Plumber's Arms, screaming he's murdered my nanny."

That night Lucan went to Uckfield, 40 miles (65 kilometers) south of London. He visited a friend. Susan Maxwell Scott, who in the early hours of Nov. 8 was the last person known to have seen him.

Police found Lucan's borrowed car at the south coast port of Newhaven, Inside was a length of lead pipe and smears of blood matching the blood groups of the victims. At Newhaven, the trail went cold. Many people, including Detective Roy Ranson, who headed the murder inquiry for three years, believe Lucan got no further than the Newhaven ferry. The suggestion is that he stepped off into the Channel.

The only clues Lucan left were three letters One said he had had a "traumatic night of unbelievable coincidences." The others described how he had surprised an intruder in Lady Lucan's house. "The circumstantial evidence against me is strong, in that V [Veroni-ca] will say it was all my doing, and I will lie doggo [low] for a while." (Reuters, AP)

■ Hotel in Africa Lucan may have booked into a hotel in Mozambique five months after he was reported missing, a London newspaper said.

The Mail on Sunday said it had uncovered a clue that suggested Lucan stayed under an assumed name at a hotel in Belra, Mozambique, in April 1975. The Hotel Les Ambassadors, it said, was scrawled under Lucan's name in an address book that belonged to David Hardy, a former Grenadier Guards captain "who hovered on the fringes of the Lucan gambling set." The address was found by police when Hardy was killed in a car accident in 1980, the paper It said Lucan's name could oot be traced in the hotel's register, but that a waiter at the hotel recognized his picture and confirmed he had stayed there "many years ago."

The waiter sent the paper's reporters to the Estoni, another hotel in Beira, where they found that a John and Davina Maxwell Scott had booked for nine days in April 1975. The names are similar to those of the missing earl's close friends, Ian and Susan Maxwell Scott. The Maxwell Scotts denied visiting Mozambique.
